Gracie ran from her home, scared as the flames engulfed it and it burned slowly to the ground. Her parents had left her inside, thinking that she was from the devil and had no way of ever bringing them anything but pain and misfortune. She sobbed hysterically as their words echoed in her mind.

“Gracie, you ain't nothing but a monster and a heathen, do you hear me? You ain't nothing but a curse and a blight on our earthly lives. All you will ever do is keep us from finding our rightful place in heaven, and there ain't anybody on God's green earth who is going to keep us from meeting our lord Jesus in the beautiful pastures he died for our sins to take us home to. Leonard stuffed his hands in his pockets, and began walking down the long corridor toward his lawyer's office. Chris walked up to the door, feeling more nervous than ever. He was about to meet his stepbrother, someone that he had never met before. A feeling of worry coursed through his body, for he knew that this man was probably not going to be good for him. Chris wasn't the type to like sharing things with brothers and sisters, and now that he found out his mom got remarried, he was already sick to his stomach.

Seeing his mother's wedding photo with the caption, “sorry we missed you!” on it really pissed him off. Chris may have been an art student and was out in France, therefore unable to see the wedding, but still that was probably the douchiest thing his mother had ever done.

BOOK #5 PREVIEW

Grover Johnson ran up to the deck and peered out over the vast blue ocean. They would reach the new country soon, but not before he was sick of the sea and sick of the crew. The thing he hadn't counted on was having to deal with the same blokes in and out for so many months of traveling, and having to hear the same crude jokes and loud laughter all the way through it all. He was tired of not being still, he was more than ready to be on stable land and just take a break from the travel.
